

YALE CEMETERY

Established 1893

Compiled by Debbie M. Swindle

The Yale Cemetery is the final resting place for many African-American coal miners and their families. Most of these coal miners had originally come from the South in hopes of a better future for themselves and their families, and the abundance of mines in southeastern Kansas at the beginning of the twentieth century proved an irresistible opportunity. Even though the community of Yale is in Kansas, the cemetery, located on the east side of State Line Road, three-quarters of a mile north of Highway 160 (which runs just east of the town of Mindenmines), is in Missouri.

The cemetery has evidence of at least 248 graves with only about 15 marked with headstones. If you see an ancestor among the following and would like to supply a picture to accompany their information, please contact Debbie Swindle (swindle@gus.pittstate.edu).

She had made her home for the past ten years with her daughter, where she died yesterday. She is survived by two sons, Albert Howard, of Alabama and Jerry Scott, of St. Louis besides the daughter at whose home she died.

For the past ten years she had been feeble and her memory had been poor. She is said to have often talked of the ‘good times before the war’ and praised the treatment she received from her master before she was liberated when the war ceased. The Bible of her master, containing her birth record, was lost in a fire which destroyed his house and for that reason she never knew her birthday.

The funeral was held at 3 o’clock today from the Yale Baptist Church, Rev. S. A. Williams of the Mt. Hebron Baptist church of Pittsburg, officiating. Burial was in the Yale cemetery.”

The funeral was held from the Methodist church in Yale this afternoon at 2:30 and interment was made in the Yale cemetery.” [Pittsburg Daily Headlight, August 25, 1909, (6).]

Terry, William

“William Tery, a Negro 42 years old, was killed some time before 7 o'clock last night while firing off shots in Western Mining and Coal Company's mine No. 17, just across the state line into Missouri, near Yale.

When found about 7 o'clock the Negro was completely covered up with coal and earth, after two shots had been touched off by him in the room in which he lay. It is known that another man was firing off shots in a room adjoining and the theory is that a piece of rock, which was jarred loose by the explosion in the adjoining room, struck Terry.

The mark of a blow was found just back of the left ear and it is believed that the falling rock struck him there, either causing instantaneous death, or unconsciousness, and that his death was caused by the falling rock and coal from his own room after the two shots went off. The victim was hurriedly dug out but was dead.

Leon Besson, state mine inspector, was notified of the accident late this afternoon, on his return from an inspection trip in another part of the county.

The Negro leaves a wife and two children, who live at Yale. The funeral will be held at 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon from the Methodist church, with interment in Yale cemetery.” [Pittsburg Daily Headlight, July 6, 1912, p. 1]
